This is a really good book but the activities in this book are too basic for my 2nd graders. I have given this book to the 1st grade teacher and she loves it. I have used some ideas out of it but the projects are too easy for 2nd graders.

This book of reproducibles covers a typical school year (September through June) with one extra section for "summer". There are 4-7 sheets per month (some months having more going on in them than other months, like November.) Each page is a different topic with a place to draw a picture and answer some open-ended questions. Some topics include: My Kite for Windy Weather (March - this one you can see on the cover), Firefighters Help Us (October), How To Draw a Turkey (November), How I Celebrate (December), Martin Luther King Jr's Dream (January), 100th Day of School (February), My Wish on a Four-Leaf Clover (March), Celebrating our Country (Summer). I'm a home educator, and this is a great supplement to our language arts.

I originally purchased a copy of this book last year and used it constantly. When it got lost over the summer I was really upset. Luckily I found it on Amazon and ordered it immediately!! I teach 2nd and 3rd graders many of whom speak English as a 2nd language. This book is great for helping them practice their writing skills. They love drawing a picture to go along with their sentences!!!

I find it a good jumping off point to get my reluctant writers to begin writing. Writing is a real struggle, and with these prompts, my students feel good as they rewrite and add details to the story starters.

Although it's not really "standards based" you could use these prompts as story starters for personal narratives and tie them into a standard with a little work. I typically have a few available for "work on writing" or will put them in homework packets for easy writing practice. These are especially helpful for students who HATE writing because they're responding to questions and drawing a picture to accompany their writing.

with 50 different drawing and writing prompts you would think that Christmas would be included... but NOPE a generic "winter holiday" page. Why is everyone trying to remove Christmas from things. I am disappointed in the purchase.

My son doesn't like writing. I bought this book for our homeschool curriculum for kindergarten and he loves it! He asks me everyday if he gets to write in this book again. I also enjoy that everything is already written out for me. It's hard to think of writing prompts for days and days on end!

This book had so many more ideas than I had ever thought of to use in my classroom. It wouldn't matter what grade level you taught, you could adapt these activities to fit all of them.
